Said my Master unto me, And cherishing those seedlings Which I committed thee? Those precious, priceless flow'ers, Bear they witness of thy toil? Or do they droop, neglected, Upon the thirsty soil? n. O, Master, I have labored--I have wearied--I have wept--And through the live-long hours.My lonely vigils kept. I wish to be found faithful--Unto thy service true; Yet will my flowers wither For all that I can do. in. Sometimes one rears in beauty Its blooming, blushing head; But ere its triumph o'er it, Its loveliness hath fled: Sometimes one grows too wildly, Or turns perished away, And if I prune or train it, It seems to droop and die. IV. Close clinging to earth's bosom, Some sweet exotic lies; With anxious care I nurse it, And every petal prize: But when its buds, fresh bursting, Give promise of much fruit, A killing frost destroys them--I stand in anguish mute. v. Sometimes the fruit abundant Is scattered on the ground; In haste I go to gather, And find it all unsound: I turn away and wonder, With disappointment sore, How fruit so ripe and golden Should rot within the core. I have guarded well thy nurslings--I've watched them day and night, That change of time or season Their beauty should not blight: I've plucked, with care uneasing, Each hurtful weed away, And from my purest fountain Have watered them each day. VH. My Master, tell me...
