When Zonal Pelargoniums (Geraniums) and other summer flowering plants are put into a deep, rich soil the probabilities are that they will make an immense amount of leaf growth at the expense of flowers, and this is not what the generality of cultivators desire. The Best Course to Pursue.---In my own experience I have found the best results accrue upon the following course of procedure: --Each season the beds are bastard trenched twice--once for the summer flowers and a second time for the bulbs--and on both occasions spent manure from a hotbed is worked into the subsoil; then as the surface soil is worked back into position a dressing of: $ parts of superphosphate of lime and 1 part of phosphate of potash in mixture is...
